The Challenge

What starts as a great project idea, has the potential to end up in a disaster. Much evidence of this can be found in research studies of the academic world and of professional bodies.

More often than not, the problem lies in the unavailability of the right people at the right place and right time, rather than a lack of expertise.

Due to the value at risk and the commitments already made, the project opportunity is progressed too quickly in the early phases of project lifecycle, without a proper onboarding (mobilising) of people, processes and technology. Consequences and gaps typically surface only at the time of construction and during hand-over stage.

A mismatch in the critical resourcing with experience and expertise at the time you need to have them mobilised. This will be due to volatility of project opportunities.

The Solution

To be in control of your project opportunity, we offer 'contract management as a service' to support your project realisation.

The offering will be of an independent professional contract lifecycle support, covering from strategy until close out with the experience integrated into your project team (virtual and/or on-site). Project owners can enjoy increased project controls and transparency with the forward looking approach and early warnings once the project becomes critical in time, quality, costs and revenues.

It becomes more cost effective as there is no need to invest in people, processes and tools. Project owners are released from the burden of people management without losing out on contract management expertise, freeing up to focus on other strategic areas.

Our team has the following competences onboard to underpin the contract lifecycle support and the integration of your project in the position as owner or as contractor;

commercial, legal, risk management, finance, optimizers, planning & reporting.
